

Turning Points in Peace Processes

Adham Hamed, Unit for Peace and Conflict Studies
University of Innsbruck

Thursday, 28 February, 2019

In contexts of protracted intrastate conflicts, in which people have often experienced loss, hate and trauma, it may appear difficult to reconcile and transform violence. However, sometimes—perhaps after months, perhaps after generations—turning points are reached: people break out of cycles of violence and re-establish more harmonious human relationships beyond dualistic dividing lines. Adham Hamed’s research is concerned with the conditions and reasons for when such situations are achieved. Drawing on transnational peace theory and preliminary findings from narrative interviews with middle-range leaders in conflict transformation in the context of Colombia, Ethiopia, as well as Israel and Palestine, the presentation will focus on structural and relational qualities of turning points in peace processes.

Adham Hamed is a doctoral candidate and research fellow at the Unit for Peace and Conflict Studies at the University of Innsbruck. He is coordinator of the UNDP project “Education for Peace in the Iraqi Higher Education System” and co-coordinator of the Austrian Development Cooperation project “Partnership for Strengthening Institutional Capacity in Peacebuilding and Conflict Transformation” in Ethiopia. His recent publications include the edited volume Revolution as a Process: The Case of the Egyptian Uprising and his first monograph Speaking the Unspeakable: Sounds of the Middle East Conflict. He is currently working on his doctoral dissertation as well as the German translation of John Paul Lederach’s seminal work The Moral Imagination: The Art and Soul of Building Peace.

UNIVERSITY OF
CAMBRIDGE
Faculty of Education

Thursday 28 February

11.00 am to 12.00 pm

Room 2S7, Faculty of Education